OPEN SATURDAY EVENINGS.

WALL STREET.

FRIDAY, April 20.
Notwithstanding a heavy selling pressure early in the day, the stock market developed decided recuperative power. Support of a determined kind was given to some of the most active stocks and there was evidence that the leading influences in Wall street are disposed to view calmly and without dread the effect of the San Francisco calamity upon the financial situation. In a monetary sense, Wall street has practically discounted the unfavorable effects of this calamity. Big operators in the stock market discussed with confidence to-day the prospects of a speedy rally in prices. The optimism of such men as D. O. Mills, E. H. Harriman, H. E. Huntington and George J. Gould regarding the future of San Francisco, tends to Wall street's vision a rift in the cloud of gloom. Belief that the stricken city at the Golden Gate will quickly rise from its ashes is encouraged by the avowed intention of the British insurance companies to settle the San Francisco risks in a liberal spirit and without delay. Cables from London announce that the British insurance companies hold about $200,000,000 of fire risks on San Francisco property, and in some instances these British companies will ignore the nullifying earthquake clauses in their policies. The further fact that a large proportion of the destroyed business property in San Francisco was owned by Eastern capitalists of large means is an assurance that active steps will be taken to rebuild that city on the most solid and substantial scale. According to the practical view that Wall street takes of the situation, the rebuilding of San Francisco will not only cause an enormous increase in the consumption of steel for the next three years, but also will give abundant employment to the people of the shattered city, and will keep the railroads busy hauling the required materials.

Much concern is felt by the downtown bankers regarding the rate of the San Francisco banks. Although eager inquiries have been made by wire, no definite or satisfactory information has been obtained up to the close of business to-day. One dispatch from Oakland, which was sent over the ticker tapes to-day, announced that "all of the banks in San Francisco are destroyed." This was construed as meaning that the bank buildings there had been destroyed or damaged. New York representatives of San Francisco banks do not believe that any important financial institutions there have been put out of business. T. S. Bache & Co., in their weekly market review says: "The banking situation in San Francisco has always been exceptionally strong, some of the largest banks in the country, both business banks and savings institutions, being located there. The canvas made by ourselves of the bond-holdings of banks throughout the country—published last December in a pamphlet entitled 'The Banks as a Safety Reserve for Banks'—shows that the business banks in San Francisco hold in bonds and securities about $120,000,000 or about $120,000,000 in round numbers. Of this, seventy-two per cent was in high class railroad bonds. The balance of carrying a second reserve in bonds will probably be demonstrated in times of disaster, such as can be obtained quickly." The further decline in the rate for foreign exchange as reported by Wall street men generally as rendering certain additional imports of gold for the most of the financial institutions which are buying gold abroad have suggested a policy of silence regarding their engagement. The public will learn the extent of the foreign purchases of gold when the initial auction is held.

The outlook for to-morrow's bank statement is very cheering. Known movements of money for the week end, and with the close of business yesterday, show that after allowing for the transfer of $3,000,000 to San Francisco reported yesterday, the banks have added about $15,000,000. This estimate takes into account of to-day's transfer of $1,000,000 to San Francisco through the New York Treasury. The New York banks gained from the San Francisco transfer about $1,000,000 from the New York Treasury, a total of $14,000,000. The difference between this amount and the $15,000,000 gain will be found in the gold coin imported by one of the banks, which does not figure in the Sub-Treasury record.
